

This week's blog is about one of the many new colour ranges we have seen recently when it comes to interior design. Our focus is on warm earthy colours, ranging from terra to soft pinks and from warm sand to coral hues. These colours have already been the focus of interest for several seasons for designers and architects alike, because they make for the perfect new neutral base. They are both warm and soothing when applied within its own colour palette, but can also be the starting point when mixing with other colour ranges. Think combinations with whites and beiges, pastels or the darker grey and black hues. We even see them combined with small accents of vivid yellow and blue, to work as eyecatching details. Furthermore, this neutral colour base is perfect when wanting to combine different trends (think dried flowers, new romance, soft shapes, the use of rattan) to create a whole new atmosphere or collection.
